Strategies to Manage Teaching Anxiety

FEAR OF THE UNKNOWN

Concentrate on the things you can control, like organizing class space and lesson planning.
- Visit the teaching space before class to figure out where to sit, stand and put your belongings.
- Get trained on the class technology.
- What teaching materials will you need to bring? (e.g. slides, markers, keys)
- Plan your lesson. Include questions that you want to ask or instructions for small group work.

STAGE FRIGHT

Think of students as your collaborators instead of as an audience. When you need to speak to the whole group, practice in advance.
- Use active learning strategies that ensure students work together, and so that you don't have to speak to the whole group for an extended time.
- Make speaking notes. Include reminders to pause, walk, make eye contact, breathe deeply, smile, and gesture.

IMPOSTER SYNDROME

Confidence takes practice, mistakes, and humility.
- Remember: teaching is not about knowing the material perfectly, it's about creating opportunities for students to learn together.
- Don't hide that you're still learning. If you're not sure about something, tell students that you'll find out.
- Recognize teaching techniques that you do well, and work on developing one new teaching skill at a time.

WORKLOAD WORRIES

Teaching is a messy human undertaking that will take up as much time as you give it. Learn to set limits.
- Limit your teaching tasks to fit into your schedule, and stick to that schedule as best you can.
- Prioritize your work and let go of perfection.
- Get better at managing your time.
